Perhaps the solid enjoyment anticipated in controlling the entire contents of an ice-cream freezer was what led a certain club of real young people in a certain street to devote their penny days to the purchase of eggs, cream, ice, etc., and persuade a certain genius to preside over the mixing thereof. The result was so delightful that in yielding to the outsiders for five and ten cent plates, instead of satiety the youngsters declared that they had no more than enough for themselves.

Such cool, restful days and sleep inducing nights as these seem to come as a reward for the long drawn out discomfort of two scorching weeks. It is difficult to realize that these chilly nights and mornings do not belong honestly to early October. The sky surely does, and were it not for the fresh breeze very about us and the certain knowledge that the calendar is to be relied upon and the various trips our friends are taking to the seashore we might readily believe that summer is past.

We almost pity those who have gone to enjoy the bracing air of Alaska and such delightful climes in proportion as they must have yearned over us last week, when we watched the sun rise with apprehension and saw it set each night with the protest of hope that the change would come and the hot days would be over.
